

Taking Stock of Lifelong Learning in Canada: Progress or Complacency? 2005-2010

L'essentiel de mon propos

- Canada has much going for it in learning—and equally much to be concerned about (as illustrated in our paradoxes).
- As in the financial industry, so too in learning: “Past performance is no guarantee of future returns.”
- Looking to the future, the question is: “Is Canada setting conditions for success—or for failure to compete successfully?”
- Canada needs a coherent approach to lifelong learning – a “Learning Architecture.”
- It is not too late to get things right. But time presses. If we in Canada are not prompt and effective, better organised and determined international competitors “will eat our lunch.”
